

Paula Marie Coomer is a poet, novelist, short-story writer, and sometimes food writer. The daughter of over two hundred years of Kentucky Appalachian mixed-blood farmers, she lived most of her childhood in the industrial Ohio River town of New Albany, Indiana. Her work has appeared or is forthcoming in many journals, anthologies, and publications including Gargoyle, Ascent, and Raven Chronicles. Ms. Coomer is the author of the newly-released novel Jagged Edge of the Sky, short stories Summer of Government Cheese, as well as the cookbook, Blue Moon Vegan and a food memoir, Blue Moon Vegetarian. Other books include the well-regarded novel based on her years as a public health nurse, Dove Creek, and Nurses Who Love English, poems about the years following 9/11. Ms. Coomer holds an MFA in creative writing from the University of Idaho and is a former long-time English instructor at Washington State University. She lives near the mouth of Hell's Canyon in southeast Washington State, where she teaches writing, organizes retreats and workshops, and has completed work on a third novel.
